The Camera's Eye

I've never much been one for photography. For me, fiddling with a camera and peering through a viewfinder spoils the enjoyment of a memorable moment.

I've known plenty of folks, though, who were obsessive picture-takers — people for whom every family outing, vacation, birthday, ball game, graduation, or other event necessitated the packing along of a veritable wealth of photo and/or video equipment. These people typically love sharing their snapshots or home movies with the rest of an unsuspecting — and generally disinterested — world, which means that if you know such a person, you've witnessed far more of their Kodak moments than you ever thought you wanted to see.

(And if you're one of these budding newshounds, please be assured that I'm not talking about you. At least, not intentionally.)

One observation about pictures: people only record the good stuff. I have yet to have anyone insist that I look through a packet of prints from their most recent family argument or a funeral, or portraits of them standing forlornly in the parking lot the day they were fired from their job. You'd never know these things ever happened from leafing through someone's photo album. (I did, however, once endure a close-up video of someone's eye surgery. Yuck.)

A camera affords the opportunity to sanitize reality. You can take a picture of the one corner of your living room that's tidy, and a person looking at the photo would never guess that the rest of your house looks like a hurricane blew through it. And we've all seen those false-fronted buildings at the movie studio that look solid when shot from the proper angle, even though they're hollow inside.

God's word makes a very poor camera. It insists on showing us, not just the best and happiest and cleanest facets of our lives, but all the dirt and grit and misery as well. The Bible gives us fair warning that it will reveal the very worst sides of ourselves by the manner in which it presents its characters. Such men as Noah, Abraham, Lot, Samson, David, Solomon, Elijah, Elisha, Jonah, and Simon Peter are all shown not just in their moments of heroic righteousness, but also in times of shameful — even tragic — weakness. If these great persons of faith do not escape the unflattering glare of truth, we can be certain that we will not either.

"For the word of God is living and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the division of soul and spirit, and of joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. And there is no creature hidden from His sight, but all things are naked and open to the eyes of Him to whom we must give account" (Hebrews 4:12-13). We can hide our flaws and our awkward moments from the eye of a camera, but we cannot escape the judgment of God's word.

There is, however, some comfort in this verity. "Nevertheless the solid foundation of God stands, having this seal: 'The Lord knows those who are His'" (2 Timothy 2:19). It is a blessed relief to know that God sees us as completely as it is possible to see, beyond even our own capability of introspection. Because we are "fully known" (1 Corinthians 13:12) by God, we can have confidence that He understands our every shortcoming and appreciates our every need. "The man who loves God is known by God" (1 Corinthians 8:3).

Having lived in the flesh, Jesus has experienced firsthand the harsh moments of human existence. Despite our foibles and failings, He is not ashamed to call us His brothers (Hebrews

2:11). This was why He came to earth as He did: "For this reason he had to be made like his brothers in every way, in order that he might become a merciful and faithful high priest in service to God, and that he might make atonement for the sins of the people. Because he himself suffered when he was tempted, he is able to help those who are being tempted" (Hebrews 2:17-18). Jesus sees our worst, and loves us still.

– Michael Rankins

Jesus' family was so poor they could not afford a lamb for sacrifice (Lk. 2:22-24). "But if she cannot afford a lamb, then she shall take two turtledoves or two young pigeons, the one for a burnt offering and the other for a sin offering," Lev. 12:8

FIFTH SUNDAY PHOTOS

Every fifth Sunday of the month, we try to highlight some of great things happening around our congregation that were captured through photography. If you happen to get a good picture of one of those great things, please feel free to post it on our Facebook page, tag us on Instagram (@wellsburgchurch), tweet us at @wellsburgchurch, or e-mail us at minister@wellsburgchurchofchrist.com with a little description of what is happening in the picture.

McKenna is reading her Bible and learning more about God! What a great example she is as she shows her enthusiasm for reading about the amazing stories of God's power and love!

The first Kids Bible Study at the Minors' home was a great success! Thank you, Dwight and Nicole, for the amazing lesson on how important it is to protect ourselves with the armor of God! Who knew how delicious it can be as well!

The kids had a great time hunting for Easter eggs at the Marshall's! Remember when Brooklyn and Austin were this young? What a wonderful reunion it was with the Henderson's that week!

It was a great night enjoying an uplifting evening with Nancy! It was pizza night and everyone had such an encouraging time with our dear sister in Christ!
